I had been to see it once + thought it the most boring and therefore disgusting film I had ever seen. I went to see it again for after all, hadn't you pointed your nose in the right direction? Rather than deal with spectacular crap as other film makers do, you had looked at something here + now of absolute relevance to anybody in England with a brain still left to call it soul.
I first tried very hard to listen to every word spoken in the flashbacks to Eliz. I. What were you saying? Eliz: 'This vision exceedeth by far all expectation. Such an abstract never before I splen.'
And so she went on - Tal de ray la la lullay the day, And John Dee spoke 'poetry' according to Time Out (those old left-overs from a radio programme, involving a panel of precocious sixth formers, called 'Cabbages + Kings', whose maturity concerns being rather left from a position of safety) though even now I can remember no distinguishing phrase from amongst the drone, only the words, 'Down, down, down,' And Ariel who flashed the sun in a mirror + considered a diamond (Right on!) great contact lenses: 'Consider the world's diversity + worship it. By denying its multiplicity, you deny your own true nature. Equality, prevail not for God but for mank sake.' Consider that! What an insult to my VIRILITY! I'm a punk man! And as you use the value you gave to punks as a warning, am I supposed to see old Elizabeth's England as some time of grace? Well, I'd rather consider that all this grand stuff and looking at diamonds is something to do with a gay (which you are) boy's love of dressing up playing at characters. (Does he have a cock between his legs or doesn't he? kinda thing)
As to the points about the near future there were 2 good lines in it. Adam (Kid): 'I don't care about the money I just don't wanna get ripped off' (Funny) + Angel or Sphinx to Adam: 'Don't forget up' etc. Life is more exciting on the streets.' Accepted that no one would want any dealings with the clichéd figment of your fantasies, Berge Linze, what did the streets have to offer? Well, they then pinched a car to go visit a nutter with a garden of plas flowers. Then they went to the roof of a tower block to give out the kind of simplistic spell Alf Garnet, or rather Mick Jones on the clash gives out. Is that your comment about the street. What you read in the music press? Good - the low budget, independent wing friends, none-equity aspect. Good that the none-equity members weren't required to act but allowed to say their lines as if reading from a little book inside their heads, because what happened as a result of this acting, as against none acting ability was that the performances depended for strength upon how much humanity the people behind the role possessed. Thus Jordan + Helen were good whereas Jenny Runacre's mediocrity of spirit bludgeoned through.

Albeit - these aspects of your approach + style were anarchically I am not interested in however interestingly you say nothing. (The Rule Britania Eurovision Song Contest was good because you said something - nationalism is vile + Eliz II is a commercial con trick.) Just like an anarchist must say, 'trust yourself.' It's the place to start.
But self-indulgence is not the answer. You have to be brave + you are only a little. You have to cut the crap + not the cheese + chuck out — VSH — for instance, those Christian crucifixion fixations (Sex is not frightening, honest) — the pervasive reek of perverse + esoteric artiness, the delight in degradation + decay simply for its beauty when stylized. An irresponsible movie. Don't remember punk this way" (all quoted from Chris Brazier in M. Maker) But I ain't insecure enough nor enough of a voyeur to get off watching a gay boy jerk off through the titillation of his masochistic tremblings. Yet pointed your nose in the right direction then you wanked. It was even more boring than Uncle Tom Don Letts' even lower budget film.

You look very pretty in that fur coat you're wearing', Oscar said, as we stood on the corner before going our separate ways.
I said, 'Peggy bought it me. It was thirteen pounds nineteen.' 'Very cheap,' Michael White said. 'Yes, I've discovered that I look better in cheap clothes.' 'I wonder what the significance of that is,' Oscar said. 'I'm from the gutter,' I said. 'And don't you ever forget it because I won't.'
